

Experiment #9874 TOP SECRET

Hitchcock House Meeting of 6th Week

Experiment set-up:

Halloween weekend went well, and now, the conditions are just right in sixth week to conduct this important research. The following preconditions are necessary:

Section I must have snickerdoodles and their section rep at a wedding.

Section II must have more beards per capita than any other section, with a propensity for prospys & flu shots.

Section III must have lots of (non-section-4-platonic) love, and a David dance.

Section IV must have at least one amazing rugby player, and use the word “swimmingly”.

Section V must be in need of beards.

Snell must have a new girl, a rocking 3rd floor, as well as a nosaic. Also, Noah must be Amanda.

Tuesdays must be Sci Fi viewing night in the Rec Room.

Condom Czars must be trapped by angry nurses who've noticed the amount of goodies they seem to need.

A dance must be planned for Friday November 18th in the Rec Room, a room which Nick actually thinks belongs to Hitchcock. (What?)

The lighting outside of the building near the ramp should be upped shortly. Thanks Robin and Jeremy for looking into that.

● ◆ ● ◆ ● ◆
Will, the RCA, looked up from the science article he was reading for Core Bio, and tapped his glasses to his teeth. He checked his e-mail again to see if anyone had heeded his announcement to send him pictures to post on the house website. With a sigh, he turned his attention back to the task at hand.

A small “bing” announced that he had received a new e-mail. “Oh, another IM sport. I almost forgot! But I'm going, because I signed up and a forfeit means loss of serious cash and glory for the house.”

● ◆ ● ◆ ● ◆
Margot looked up from her PSAC fiction masterpiece. “This will surely make people want to attend the glorious U of C!” she cried. At that moment, her clock clicked to 5:00 am. She slumped in her chair. Late night/early morning ideas are not always the best. Crumpling up her masterpiece, she fed it to the fire, took her hat off the desk, and swept out the door. She was off to give a receipt to Tiwalade, the treasurer, in order to get reimbursed. If she waited too long, she'd no longer be able to get her money back. A typed sheet on her desk reveals her genius ideas: a meet and greet with food for the prospys in the Green Room when they arrive . . . an ice-cream party for those who take prospys into their homes and hearts . . .

● ◆ ● ◆ ● ◆
That was the final scene of the movie, and the Bad Movie Night goers were sorely disappointed. The flick had actually been good – and not good bad. They stayed up all night, and then headed to Bartlett in the morning. They wandered around, disregarding the mislabeled vegan food, inflated cookie prices, mislabeled apple cider, the reborn half portions. They remembered Bruce's mention of supporting local farmers and banning Coca Cola – but the morning is not a good time for heavy thinking. “Fartlett,” they said. Fartlett indeed.

● ◆ ● ◆ ● ◆
“This is what you want us to perform?” Sam asked the mafia mobster, as he read over the script. “It's just that Jonny & I have a better idea,” Sam said. Jonny nodded. The mobster folded his arms. “As long as you come to the Ghetto Party community meeting at 5:30 pm on Tuesday, you have carte blanche,” the mobster mumbled.

● ◆ ● ◆ ● ◆
I don't know if this is how it actually happened. I do know, however, that the At Large performance was too incredible to do it justice in these minutes.

● ◆ ● ◆ ● ◆
The people controlling Deena's brain decided not to make their movie idea: “Being Deena Hellervitch”. It's already been done. Instead, they commanded her fingers to continue to type, adding here, taking out there, advertising Jim's announcement service in there. She wasn't a bad vessel. But they were getting sick of granola bars. Be sure to look out for flu shot (it'll be free) information from the SCC.

FWOOM. They landed on the New Jersey Turnpike.

Say hello to the stellar folks who help make our home great. They work hard, so learn their names

U of C Fall Formal
Friday Nov. 11th - email zarahk@uchi for more info.

Be on the lookout for more info about Hitchcock community service. Julia has a lot of great ideas. Let's give back to the community and have tons of fun. (!)