Like sperm flocking to a fertile egg, Tahoe Schrader, Katie Soule, Kevin Baker, Theresa Peng, and Gannon fought for conception. After quick foreplay and some rather dirty talk from each candidate, the population of the House let arms stand erect in favor of their chosen collector of contraception. Pansexual Theresa Peng ended atop.

Intercourse doesn't quite end there. Rumors are floating about that Gannon was ejaculated from the race for what opponents are calling "Aggressively Pro-Sex Ideology." In response, members of the Irish Community accused Peng for standing on a platform of "vaguity" and Head size and shape has always been a subject of much Bartlett debate for Hitchcock over the last few years, and now with the departure of Nathan "Big Head" Bartley, têtes are looking tiny. After this academic year it now appears that our very own General Goober-

"inexperience."

The other three runners in the erection are ridiculed for splitting the vote, and making things awkward for both parties. It is no secret that Soule's sole reason for even entering the race was to show her stuff off to the new pool of first years. Pundits are still plagued with confusion on the drive behind both Schrader and Baker, as both seem "as foreign to condoms as Snellians to IM Sports."

The real question remains: Why are we getting so worked up over contraceptive? It's not as if anyone in this house even has sex. Right? Come on, guys....? You've got a lot of homework....

Heads are Shaping Up

head John Bobka will leave us. This dilemma leaves many residents scratching their own noggin.

But there is hope. Early last week, our very own Sophie Holtzmann was overheard outlining the features of a first year as, "That kid with the triangular shaped head." With such promise, who knows what oddities will emerge as we objectify the domes of the newest degenerates of the House. Here's looking at you, head.
